M. de Lesseps had scarcely exchanged a hurried greeting with her Majesty, when a loud shout announced that the nrob had made their way into the private gardens of the palace. This, coupde Lesseps, had the effect of partially rousing the Coppress to a sense of her position; but she still seemed to cling to the idea that salvation for the dynasty as well as for the nation lay in the deliberations of the Assembly, and pointing in the direction of the Corps Legislatif, she requested that the Min pointing in the direction of the isters might at once be informed of the indignities to which she was exposed The embarrassment and anguish of those who surrounded her at this moment, I am assured, was fearful.

M. de Lesseps walked out of the apart-

It was a fearfully anxious moment. The very custodians of the Louvre, had deserted their post, and there was no messenger within hail. The shouts grew louder and louder as the crowd ap-proached the palace. It seemed madness to attempt to return.

The Empress still maintained an at titude of passive courage. I am told that she did not betray the slightest sign of agitation until she pointed, with a hasty gesture, at one of the young ladie- who, from the deadly paleness that overspread her features, seemed to be about to faint, though happily the fugitives were spared this threatened

The Empress reached the house in the Boulevard Malesherbes in safety and without attracting any further attention. In the evening, still within the safe. shelter of a hackney coach, she was conducted to the Northwestern station in the Place du Havre, and early the next day she was at the pretty, and, thanks to the lateness of the season, the almost deserted, bathing place of Dean ville, on the Northern coast, where she remained incognito in the shelter of a second rate hotel, while M. de Lesseps went out to make the necessary arrangements for her embarkation.

Meanwhile the Empress was a prej to the keenest anxiety about the Prince Imperial, who had left the country some tew days before. His destination known, but whether he had reached that destination was as yet a secret. In point of fact, on the Monday evening, while M. de Lesseps was engaged in the search for a vessel at Deauville, the at Mons, whence the gentlemen who accompanied him at once communicated by a telegraph, through the intermediceed at once to Hastings, where he arrived via Ostend and Dover on the following Tuesday, Owing to some subsequent meeting with him in Eng-
